Our Diocese has a very strong & active program of prevention and also outreach to victims. Please make known to this telephone resource or to one of our priests any knowledge you might possess about abusive situations in our Church. Please join our priests & Bishop as they deal with this highly destructive and emotionally draining issue this coming week & especially pray for all victims of abuse!!

PLANNING
Lawrence E. Mick

The ministry of the prophet keeps showing up in the readings of Ordinary Time. Perhaps, that's a good indication of the importance of the prophetic vocation in our world. Prophets speak for God calling people back to God's ways. Doing so is never easy, because most of us don't like to be reminded when we are not living up to our best selves, the people God made us to be.

Today's readings highlight the roles of the prophet in several ways. The first reading reminds us that God calls people in different ways to prophesy. Seventy of the elders in Moses' time received the spirit of prophecy in a ritual gathering. Two others, through, missed the event yet still were filled with the spirit and began to prophesy.

In the epistle and the Gospel, we are reminded of the reason we need prophets. The epistle reveals James as a prophet, chastising the rich for wage theft and abuse of the poor. In the Gospel, Jesus challenges us to be diligent in avoid temptations that lead us to sin.

There are those in every age whom God calls to be prominent prophets, people who confront the powers of evil in very public ways, often drawing attention from the media. But God also calls people to prophesy who are otherwise ordinary citizens and members of the church. In fact, the words of Moses suggest that God calls all those who receive the Spirit of God to prophesy: "Would that all the people of the Lord were prophets!"

All the baptized have received the Holy Spirit, and in the Rite of Baptism of Children, we proclaim that the baptized share in Christ's ministry as priest, prophet and king. We may carry out that mission in various ways in different situations, but it always calls for speaking the truth, especially when we see injustice and oppression.

Within the worship arena, preachers carry the clearest burden of prophecy, of course. They are called to proclaim the word of God clearly and apply it to contemporary situations, which often means challenging the way our society thinks and operates.

We, too, have a prophetic task for parish worship. Situations that cry out for change and justice must be regularly included in the general intercessions. Music choices need to frequently highlight God's call to care for the needy, to free the oppressed, to assist the needy, and to work for peace.

We might spend a little time together discussing what issues in your area and in our world need our attention during worship. How can you be prophets to your community and also call all members of the parish to carry out their own role as prophets in our society?
